BACKGROUND

The University of Washington School of Law (UW Law) adopted the Strategic Plan for Diversity, Inclusion, Equity, and Multiculturalism in 2015 and updated it in 2017. Many stakeholders contributed to the creation and updating of the Plan. The Faculty Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion Committee reviewed the Plan during the 2019-2020 academic year. That review produced an honest assessment of the school's progress and resulted in the appointment of an Associate Dean of Diversity, Equity and Inclusion to direct the school's strategic efforts. This updated plan, spearheaded by the Faculty Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion Committee during the 2020-2021 academic year, builds on the goals and strategies of the original plan and continues the law school's commitment to diversity, equity, inclusion, and multiculturalism in its public mission as well as in its devotion to the pursuit of excellence. This updated plan also seeks to align the law school's goals with the broader diversity goals and commitment to racial equity adopted by the University of Washington, as well as the 2020 Anti-Racism Statement issued by the Dean of UW Law.

INTRODUCTION AND PURPOSE

UW Law grounds its commitment to diversity, equity, inclusion, multiculturalism, and antiracism principles in its public mission as well as in its devotion to the pursuit of excellence. UW Law strives to infuse its responsibility and commitment broadly and deeply into every aspect of its operations. Motivating this Plan is a shared commitment to these principles and a desire to reflect them in the school's people, programs, and pursuits.

The guiding principles of this Plan—diversity, equity, inclusion, multiculturalism, and antiracism—inform its actions, goals, and strategies, while the overarching principles of respect and humility are at its core. These principles are described as:

Diversity: The principle of diversity contemplates acknowledgement, acceptance, and respect for differences among individuals and groups of people. These differences may be based on factors including but not limited to race, ethnicity, socioeconomic status, culture, age, gender identity or expression, language, religion, sexual orientation, disabilities, national origin, and citizenship, as well as differences in viewpoints and life experiences. The principle of diversity embraces and incorporates the benefits of multiculturalism.

Equity: Equity refers to fair treatment and recognizes that each person does not start from the same place with the same access to resources. Equitable systems help to promote principles of diversity, inclusion and antiracism by helping to ensure that diverse voices are represented and empowered to participate in the law school community.

Inclusion: Inclusion refers to community expectations and practices that accommodate and embrace the diversity of individuals and groups. Inclusion grants all parties a sense of ability, dignity, empowerment, and opportunity, and it supports open and respectful discussion among those parties. Inclusion acknowledges the many forms of wisdom in the room and also recognizes that, historically, primary stakeholders often have been left out of that room. In an inclusive environment, people may have differing perspectives based on their backgrounds and experiences, but all feel welcomed, respected, and valued. An inclusive community strives to actively identify and eliminate barriers that have prevented the full participation of diverse and marginalized groups.

Multiculturalism: Multiculturalism refers to the view that cultural differences should be respected or even encouraged rather than minimized, erased, or silenced. Sociologists use the concept of multiculturalism to describe one way of approaching cultural diversity within a society. Underlying multiculturalism is the belief that members of different cultures can live peacefully alongside each other; assimilation is not necessary, nor perhaps even desirable.

Antiracism: Antiracism refers to the practice of identifying and actively opposing racism. Embedded in its principles is the understanding that the injustices arise from the white supremacy, structural racism, xenophobia, colonialism, and explicit and implicit bias that have existed throughout the history of the United States and also in other international contexts. Antiracism requires acknowledging the ongoing, systemic and perpetual racial and societal injustices embedded in the past and present, including through legal systems that have facilitated discrimination against many marginalized people. Antiracism also requires a firm commitment to examining and rectifying the injustices that may be embedded in our own policies and practices.

Respect and Humility: Respect is reflected by acknowledging and appreciating the character, dignity, and rights of others. Respect does not mean agreeing with all expressed points of view. Respect and humility are interdependent and are at the core of all actions directed towards antiracism, diversity, equity, and inclusivity.

Achieving a more diverse, inclusive, and equitable institution, free of racism requires us to meaningfully address the climate and culture of UW Law. UW Law is committed to developing and sustaining a healthier community and climate by providing the conditions necessary for all law school members to succeed. All must feel welcomed, supported, included, valued, and empowered to participate in developing and realizing the school's mission. UW Law must actively work to change the culture in a way that makes even the most vulnerable members feel like they belong here.

To cultivate an inclusive climate that promotes diversity, equity, multiculturalism, and antiracism, UW Law must infuse these principles into its curriculum, classrooms, scholarship, faculty service, and workplace culture. Further development of an open, inclusive, and diverse UW Law community will enhance the experience for students, faculty, librarians, and staff by ensuring an exchange of ideas and views across differences, challenging stereotypical preconceptions, clarifying unconscious biases, addressing micro-aggressions, encouraging critical thinking, communicating effectively and respectfully even when there are disagreements, and attaining the skills to participate fully in cross-cultural learning conversations.

The law school must incorporate these principles into its curriculum by providing innovative and institutionalized educational channels for critical examination of history, culture, and the law. It is essential that faculty promote the values of diversity, equity, inclusion, multiculturalism, and antiracism through their teaching. This improves critical thinking skills and encourages academic confidence. Forms of understanding that extend across perspectives builds the analytical skills and creativity needed for UW Law graduates to thrive in all areas of law, business, public service, and beyond.

UW Law must also encourage and promote rigorous scholarship and service to the law school and community that reflects the values of diversity, equity, inclusion, multiculturalism, and antiracism. Faculty research, scholarship, and service should inspire teaching, as faculty bring fresh ideas, insights, and experiences into the classroom for student discussion and debate. In addition, UW Law must support an inclusive workplace culture for librarians and staff by promoting service, learning and community building opportunities that reflect the values of diversity, equity, inclusion, multiculturalism, and antiracism.

The realization of diversity, equity, inclusion, multiculturalism, and antiracism will require creativity, commitment, and cooperation from all community members regardless of different experiences, backgrounds, and beliefs. These efforts require constructive discussion. In this context, constructive discussion refers to an exchange of ideas, pursued to improve mutual understanding or discover common ground for action, that intentionally reveals and incorporates differences of perspectives and beliefs of those involved. UW Law recognizes the importance of constructive discussion as a part of a democracy premised on the rights and cooperation of individuals, a public university committed to academic freedom and rational inquiry, and a profession committed to principles and processes. UW Law acknowledges both the instrumental and inherent value of protecting the expression of personal experiences, viewpoints, and ideas.

UW Law also acknowledges the ongoing and negative impacts of racism, colonialism, and related injustices in its own institution and greater society. Reducing the impact of and eventually eliminating these injustices requires study, teaching, and active community engagement. This Plan contributes to those efforts by harnessing intelligence and imagination. Through these means, it seeks to develop impactful scholarships, innovative curriculum, and excellent lawyers in a way that helps to reduce and ultimately eliminate racial and ethnic bias.

Recognizing that we must overcome the complexities of systemic discrimination that has negatively affected marginalized communities, we must challenge traditional paradigms. These traditional paradigms limit progress on the successful recruitment, retention, and development of students, librarians, staff, and faculty. Therefore, the Strategic Plan includes multiple factors targeted at correcting past inequities, maintaining supportive and inclusive environments where all can thrive, and ensuring that existing paradigms support continuing progress to achieve these goals.

Finally, the success of this Plan depends on our ability to hold ourselves accountable. It is vital that all members of the UW Law community commit to working towards this Plan’s goals. Law School leadership and faculty, in consultation with librarians, staff, and students, must accept accountability by implementing new initiatives to achieve those goals, ensure that best practices are disseminated within the law school, and communicate the law school’s commitment to diversity, equity, inclusion, multiculturalism, and antiracism.

STRATEGY AND ACCOUNTABILITY

This plan identifies five goals, each with discrete objectives. For every objective, this Plan identifies the person primarily responsible for the objective as well as other community members who should be centrally involved in its implementation.

The Associate Dean for Diversity, Equity and Inclusion plays an additional, multifaceted role with respect to each objective. More specifically, the Associate Dean for Diversity, Equity and Inclusion is responsible for informing each person who is primarily responsible for an objective of that responsibility; is empowered to provide input, in the Associate Dean’s discretion, into efforts to implement that objective; and is expected to inquire periodically about the status of that objective.
